This home has been designed around the existing site of the client's current home. Set back on the property the house is being built adjacent to the home the clients have lived in for forty years. The architectural character of the house develops from a north woods lodge and New England country home vernacular. The simple forms of the house are rendered in stained cedar wood resting on a base of dry-stacked granite - conveying an early American spirit. The design also focuses around the development of natural light optimizing the qualities of the primary spaces within the house.
